I wouldn't consider the two caps the same way. IMHO, any PIO cap is a "tone control", and will color the circuit performance some by its presence (I'm not saying this is bad, BTW).

The Teflon V-Caps are like no cap at all. They seem to disappear in the circuit. It's hard to describe how you "don't" hear something, but I "didn't" hear them. I hope that makes some sense.

Cost wise the V-Caps are quite high, so they may be closer to the silver PIO than you might think.
